

INQ
Internal use only

Dear colleagues,

It has come to be my duty to inform you that the cafeteria cutlery is the property of the Organization. It is, therefore, under no circumstance to be displaced or be subject to another ownership. Any attempts to change its ownership are considered to be a violation of article 12.3 of the Organization Constitution and are punishable by expulsion and everything it entails.

I may be willing to turn a blind eye on these acts of theft as long as all stolen property (including, but not limited to: three coffee mugs branded with the Organization insignia; two standard dinner plated, branded; one teapot, branded—seriously, a teapot?).

It is also my duty to remind you that the Organization insignia can not be displayed publicly under any circumstances, so I'm not even sure whom you're planning to impress with the stolen goods.

I sincerely hope this misunderstanding will be cleared very soon. I allow the thief one week before an official inquiry is made.

Snr Inq. Orven